Popular Sayings.

Almost every one has on hand a store of trite apposite sentences, using them daily, but having no knowledge of their authorship; and as men are apt to be curious concerning the habits and laws they follow or are governed by, tracing their origin back into the dimness of long slumbering centuries, so they are often posses sed with a desire to know who first framed these words into the sentences so familiar to them. The following have been strung together by one whose nature leads him to ramble among

by one whose nature leads him to ramble among books for his soul's best amusement.

It was Thomas A'Kempis who, in the fifteenth century, gave us "Man proposes, but God disposes;" and the equally well known saying, "Of two evils the less is to be chosen," the original of "Of two evils choose the least." Thomas Tusser, a writer of the sixteenth century, gave, "Better late than never," and the key for four other common phrases in "For Christmas comes but once a year," "It's an ill wind that turns none to good," "The stone that is religious and the common phrases."

wind that turns none to good," "The stone that is rolling can gather no moss," "Look ere thou leap, see ere thou go." It was Francis Rabelais, a French wit of the same century, who said that by "Robbing Peter he paid Paul," and told that when "The devil was sick, the devil a monk would be; It was also in the sixteenth century that Sir Edward Coles, a calchysted English lawser. Edward Coke, a celebrated English lawyer, said "For a man's house is his castle," and Lord Brooke sung, "And out of mind as soon out of sight." It was Christopher Marlowe, the forerunner of Shakspeare, and father of the grand old English drama, who sang to the ladies, "Love me little, love me long," and told of "Infinite riches in a little room."

of "Infinite riches in a little room."

We owe to the public genius of Shakspeare,
"This is the short and long of it," "The world's mine oyster," "Comparisons are odious," "As merry as the day is long," "A Daniel come to judgment," "It is a wise father that knows his own child," "And thereby hangs a tale," "He needs must go that the devil drives," "Why this is very midsummer madness," "The smallest worm will turn when trodden on." "Smooth rups the water where madness," "The smallest worm will turn when trodden on," "Smooth runs the water where the brook is deep," "So wise so young, they say, do ne'er live long," "The weakest goes to the wall," "We have seen better days," "This was the most unkindest cut of all," "Stand not upon the order of your going," "A deed with. out a name," "Frailty, thy name is woman," "I am a man more sinned against than sinning," "They laugh that win," and a thousand more as good, though not as well known. Francis Bacon, the "wisest, greatest, mean est of mankind," said "Knowledge is power." and Beaumont and Fletcher pronounced that "What's one man's poison, signor, is another's meat or drink." Milton tells of a "Moring melancholy and moonstruck madness," and also of "A wilderness of sweets, "All hell broke loose," and "The paradise of fools."

Samuel Butler, author of "Hudibras," dub-

Samuel Butler, author of "Hudibras," dubbed a religious creed thus:—"Twas Presbyterian true blue." Dryden says, "None but the brave deserve the fair," and "Sweet is pleasure after pair." He also warns thus:—"Beware the fury of a patient man," "All delays are dangerous in war," and thinks that "Men are but children of a larger growth." The Earl of Roscommon has it that one must "Choose an author as you choose a friend." The Earl of Roscommon has it that one must "Choose an author as you choose a friend," and says that "The multitude are always in the wrong." John Bueyan wisely reminds us that "He that is down needs fear no fall," and Thomas Southerne "That pity's akin to love." It was crazy Nathaniel Lee, who averred that "When Greeks joined Greeks, then was the tug of war."

"When Greeks joined Greeks, then was the tug of war."

Matthew Prior thought "The end must justify the means," and Dean Swift said "Bread is the statt of life." George Farquhar called "Necessity the mother of invention;" Edward Young, a very sombre fellow, said "Death loves a shining mark;" he also thought that "Man wantabut little, nor that little long," and a fool at forty is a fool indeed;" he also told of "Tired nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep;" Pope says "To err is human, to forgive divine;" and Thompson tells of "Cruel as death, and hungry as the grave." It was John Gay who said "While there's life, there's hope," and sang of "Over the hills and far away;" LawrenceSternethought, and Benjamin Franklin that "God help them who help themselves;" Cowper said that "Variety's the very spice of life; Thomas Campall that "Tis distance lends enchantment to the view;" he also said, "And coming events cast their shadow before; "Daniel Webster told of a "Sea of upturned faces," and Washington Irvthought our idol was "The mighty dollar," Byron says that war presents "Battle's magnificently stern array," and Keats that "A thing of beauty is a joy forever," and last, it was Bishop Berkely, an English prelate, who in the seventeenth century said, "Westward the cource of empire takes its way."

Butchering a heiler is thus described in the Butchering a heiter is thus described in the Boston Herald:—"Her head was tied down to the floor, so as to present her broad forehead to the mallet. The athletic wielder of this to the mallet. The athletic wielder of this struck her first under the left horn. 'Now all sensibility is gone,' said he, as the heifer mechanically recovered from the blow. 'That concussion acted on the spinal marrow, or the 'peth,' as we call it, and she is numb and dizzy. She won't feel these other blows, hardly,' and so saying he administered half a dozen blows, one after another, on the forehead of the cow, which grew weaker and weaker, and finally fell inert. The brain, it seems, dictates a rebellion sometimes, if the first blow is not hard enough, but a skillful butcher understands just how hard it should be to shock the system just how hard it should be to shock the system and produce a comparative insensibility. At the abattoir the victim is knifed in the stomach, instead of the neck, as in many other establishments. This is a superior process, because the knife strikes into the concentration of veins and arteries, and provides a way for the immediate passage out of all the blood, before it coagulates." Great "Swiss Process" Flour
